

Press release:

The program for Berlin Buzzwords 2013 is published

Berlin, April 25th, 2013 - With about five weeks to go the countdown has started. The 4th edition of Berlin Buzzwords will be run for two days with presentations of over 30 international speakers specific to the three tags "search", "store" and "scale".

Among others the speakers are:

- Michael Busch (Twitter)
- Nitay Joffe (Facebook)
- Ariel Waldman (Spacehack.org)
- Ted Dunning (MapR Technologies)
- Grant Ingersoll (LucidWorks)

The conference for developers and users of open source software projects, focuses on the issues of scalable search, data-analysis in the cloud and NoSQL-databases. The whole program can be checked out here: <http://berlinbuzzwords.de/program/session-schedule/all> Beside the main conference there will be lots of supporting program with barcamp, hackathons, trainings and workshops.

Tickets for Berlin Buzzwords 2013 are available at <http://berlinbuzzwords.de/content/tickets>

Berlin Buzzwords standard tickets are available for 550€. Berlin Buzzwords offers a special rate for groups of 5 and more attendees with a 20% discount off the regular ticket price. Every ticket includes free WLAN access, food, snacks and beverages throughout the 2 day conference.

"I think Buzzwords is a fantastic conference. Anyone interested in storage, search, and scaling should definitely find a way to attend," says Eric Evans, speaker at the Berlin Buzzwords 2012.

Berlin Buzzwords' goal is to provide a platform for developers, analysts and scientists involved in large scale computing projects to discuss and exchange new ideas. Topics of interest include storing, processing and searching large amounts of data.
